YOUTH INTERNATIONAL PARTY FROM THE INTERNATIONAL

The Youth International Party (YIP), commonly known as YIPPIES, was formed in January 1968 by a small group of artists, writers and musicians and has been referred to as "the first attempt to give social direction to the drug movement." Founded

Founders of the YIP, all users of LSD, other "psychedelic" consciousness-expanding drugs, and marijuana, includes Paul KRASSNER, editor of the satirical magazine, The Realist; Edward SANDERS, leader of the rock group, the Flugs; Abbott Howard HOFFMAN and Jerry Clyde RUBIN, defendants in the "Chicago Seven" conspiracy trial.

The YIP has no formal structure, no leaders and is a non-membership New Left coordinating group, headquartered in New York City, which utilizes the extensive underground press network to broadcast "its gospel of protest and ridicule of the establishment."
